The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

Claims 1-9, 14, 16-21, 28-36 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Herrero Garcia et al '491 or Pepe et al '905

Herrero Garcia '491, "HG", discloses, col. 1, lines 35-40, a voicemail system (VMS) that will take advantage of automatic call forwarding when there is no answer. HG '491 never specifically discloses applicant's method steps of claim 1. However, this is what is happening in col. 1, lines 35-40, when it is disclosed that a VMS system takes advantage of automatic call forwarding upon no answer. The phone number of the voicemail is the designated forwarding address. The phone call from the calling party to the called party would be applicant's "receiving the communication." When the called party does not answer, the phone call is automatically forwarded to the VMS, or applicant's central forwarding repository. There, the message from the calling party is stored under the called party's phone number, or applicant's saving the communication. When a party wishes to check their messages they pick up the phone, usually dialing their own phone number, which is now busy since the phone is off-hook and connected to voice mail where the user will enter their PIN to pick up their messages. Official notice is taken that this is how automatic call forwarding and voice mail works. Pepe et al disclose call forwarding to voice mail, col. 30, lines 49-53. HG discloses receiving a PIN from the caller, col. 13, lines 15-32. For claim 5, HG discloses that the communication received can also be non-data in the form of banking data, col. 19, lines 40-65. HG also discloses that the non-audio communication could be home shopping data, col. 20, lines 15-20. Then, once HG retrieves the non-audio communication they convert it into voice signals, col. 13, lines 1-15. Likewise, Pepe et al do the same thing by converting the text message into speech and playing the message to the waiting caller, col. 29, lines 59-61. Pepe et al also discloses in col. 34, lines 50-65, that email and facsimiles can also be redirected. See Fig. 33 also. Regarding claim 7, Pepe et al disclose in col. 28 facsimile messaging and since Pepe et al has already been shown to incorporate the use of text to speech conversion, then the facsimile message can also be readily converted from text to speech. Concerning claim 8, Pepe et al disclose in col. 35, lines 11-26, that email will be converted from text to speech and sent to a voice mailbox.

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 10-13, 15, are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Pepe et al. or Herrero Garcia et al

Regarding claim 10, Pepe et al are converting text messages to speech and it would have been obvious to a person having ordinary skill in the art to take the ANI of the calling party that is transmitted between the 1st and 2nd ring tones and convert this number into a person's name through the text to speech conversion unit and give this name to the called party. The motivation for making this modification is that Pepe is already converting email and facsimile messages into speech, and to similarly convert the ANI of the calling party into speech and deliver it the called party would be within the purview of the skilled artisan in the telecommunications art.

Claims 22-27 are objected to as being dependent upon a rejected base claim, but would be allowable if rewritten in independent form including all of the limitations of the base claim and any intervening claims.

There is no disclosure in either HG '491 or Pepe et al of converting only the header information of a facsimile into audio and forwarding it the called party when the called party checks his voice mail messages.
